

AGRI-CULTURE, INC. ANNOUNCES
NEW AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION PROGRAM LAUNCHES 2026

FOCUS AGRICULTURE - SANTA CLARA COUNTY

Quotes from Focus Agriculture Santa Cruz County Graduates

“Focus Agriculture provided me with a cornerstone of comprehension and appreciation for our agriculture and the people behind it on the Central Coast. I am happy that this program is extending into Santa Clara County...”

Jimmy Panetta, Congressman, United States House of Representatives

“...in health care we know that nutrition and wellness go hand-in-hand, but I now have an even greater understanding of the essential connection between agriculture and the health of our community...”

Nan Mickiewicz, President/CEO, Dominican Hospital

“...As a community college leader new to the region, learning about the challenges facing local farmers helped shape my conversations with faculty and staff about our academic programs in agriculture technology and horticulture...”

Matthew Wetstein, President, Cabrillo College

“...Focus Agriculture...opened my eyes to many different aspects of agriculture in my home county - and was an invaluable grounding as I encountered those issues and interests as a state legislator and cabinet secretary...”

John Laird, Senator, State of California

Frequently Asked Questions About Focus Agriculture

1. What are the benefits of participating in Agri-Culture's Focus Ag class?

Focus Agriculture Santa Clara County allows community leaders to have a two-way conversation with people involved in agriculture. The program is structured so that participants gain in-depth knowledge of the many commodities, issues and people involved in local agriculture here in Santa Clara County.

2. Who is in the class?

The program is designed so that community leaders from the different fields within the county participate. These include elected officials, appointed representatives, non-profits, news media, local business, environmental groups, educators, etc.

3. Who does the training?

Each segment of the sessions are presented by knowledgeable individuals on the day's particular subject. In most cases, it is local individuals who are directly involved in the specific subject. As an example, a grower may speak on the effect of land use planning and a governmental agency may explain urban growth demands. An environmental advocate may talk about water quality. The program is proud to always present both sides of issues. Agricultural issues change and the program changes as well. We rely on the participant evaluations of each session to make the program better.

4. Where do these leadership classes meet?

Classes are held throughout Santa Clara County to give participants a first had experience of the different geographic and microclimates that exist in this unique area.

5. How long are the leadership programs, and when do they start?

The program consists of five one-day-per-month sessions. It begins in June and ends in October.

6. Must I attend every class day, and are there extra-curricular requirements?

The program is very strict on attendance. None of the presenters are paid for their time. We receive more applications than we select so it's important that the participants attend. There are no extracurricular requirements as part of the program. It is hoped that after a person has graduated from Focus Agriculture Santa Clara County, he/she will become more aware and involved in agricultural issues.

7. What is the application deadline?

The deadline for applications for the program varies each year but it is normally the middle of April.

8. What is the cost of Focus Ag class?

Focus Agriculture costs approximately $1,500 per participant. The participant is only responsible for $500 tuition.

9. What are our expectations of our participants?

In addition to fully participating in the classes, we expect participants to share what they have learned with friends, colleagues and others in the community. As a result, the program's impacts are greatly multiplied.
